June 5: “ART CLEANING AND RESTORATION”

The science of cleaning and repairing aging or damaged canvases, frames, and sculptures while maintaining the artist’s original creation and intent is a challenge that will be described in detail. Examples will be presented, and processes explained.

Peter and Teresa Fogg have operated an art conservation practice from their Wiscasset studio since 1987. Trained in the U.S. and Europe, they are affiliated with the American Institute for Conservation, Sotheby’s and the Smithsonian Institute, among others. They enjoy a world-wide reputation and are known for their quality and expertise.

June 12: “MAINE PUBLIC RADIO: A COMMUNITY RESOURCE”

Maine Public Radio and NPR are unlike other media outlets. Committed to serving the public good and eschewing the profit motive, this broadcaster occupies a unique position in the broadcast spectrum. Mark Vogelzang will describe the mission and the metrics which Public Radio uses to assess its effectiveness within our state. He will describe revenue streams, tax considerations, and community responsibilities.

Mark Vogelzang became President of Maine Public Radio (MPR) in January, 2012. Initially interested in broadcasting as a college student, he joined Terri Gross (Fresh Air) in Philadelphia, then progressed to station manager at several public radio stations before joining Vermont Public Radio as President.

June 19: “BOWDOIN COLLEGE: TOWN AND GOWN FROM THE COLLEGE’S PERSPECTIVE”

How does Bowdoin College perceive its relationship with the greater community? What services and benefits does the college offer and what services does it receive from the town? What are the tax consequences and what are the costs and benefits to each by the presence of the other? What about auditing of classes, use of facilities, admission to athletic events, and support of town commerce? Matt Orlando will explore and explain these issues from the college’s perspective and answer questions.

Matt Orlando graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Trinity College and received an MBA from St. Xavier University. He is a chartered financial analyst. Matt is active in community affairs, and serves on boards at Mid Coast-Parkview Health Systems, and as Treasurer of the United Way and the Cal Ripken Youth Baseball League.

June 26: “MID COAST HEALTH SYSTEMS: COMMUNITY CITIZEN AND PROVIDER”

We have an outstanding community health care system, primarily the result of an excellent community hospital and a full complement of highly trained physicians and surgeons. Yet, there are major challenges. Can Mid Coast Health Systems continue to provide excellent care and availability 24/7 and compete with competitors? Lois Skillings will discuss this challenge and describe efforts to address it.

Lois Skillings is President and CEO of Mid Coast-Parkview Health Systems. A life-long Mainer, Lois is a nurse by training, graduating from University of Southern Maine. She was motivated to join the executive ranks when she participated in the Robert Wood Executive Nurse Fellow Program in 2008. She subsequently was Vice President of Nursing Services at Mid Coast Hospital before becoming CEO and President in 2011.
